

Maximising Redemption: Internal Reconciliation

Internal Reconciliation

At this point in history, where humanity stands on the brink of salvation or extermination, my prayers are that Jesus will confirm this offer and people graciously accept God's offer of a redeeming covenant of grace. (I lack the arrogance to presume that just because we've gotten this far that complete success is guaranteed). If we proceed in faith that this is a point in history where the formal offer will be made and accepted, let us spend a little time considering sin in the karmic sense.

The following section might appear to be a bit of diversion as my response to those who hope God "strikes me down". However, it needs to be included for non-self reasons. Firstly, to remind the Christians and Muslims that God has internal reconciliation mechanisms for each and every soul (something that they seem to have either forgotten in recent times). Also, in traveling this journey I have found an affinity with many of the Jewish models. Thirdly, for the eastern traditions there is a tendency towards discounting the spiritual development of those who live "impure" lives. There is a warning for such souls that biblical characters such as Sarah remind us, that the mundane also contains the divine, and that the "golden age" can not happen without lifting the karma from enmeshed souls. Again, this is where the biblical God has often gone to great lengths to "circuit break" downward spirals granting clean slates, such as with Abraham and Moses as this following paper points out: <http://www.chabad.org/parshah/article.asp?AID=325776> Then of course we have Jesus who with chutzpah and faith took on responsibility for the karma of all humanity for all time, with the often underestimated miracle being not that Jesus went through with the crucifixion (which was no mean feat in itself) but that the ultimate God unconditionally accepted Jesus' sacrifice.

There are some that might suggest that God will strike me down for suggesting these offers be made. To be honest I thought I would have died a long time ago, and the human component collapsed after the tsunami when the now ex- husband openly displayed his infection by the deceiver for the first time. With the collapse of the human component the higher self realized the danger and had to camouflage to complete the post-tsunami heralding. God's 2005 reconciliation works were not lost because the deceiver presumed the higher self would need time to integrate and function. What the deceiver did not know is that the human and divine components have had a high level of integration for most of my life (there was a period of withdrawal when the human insisted on marrying her now ex-husband – thus the deceiver's minion only married the human and there was no marriage covenant with the divine component – another surprise that caught the deceiver out).

In fact, much of the life time abuse and entrapments were done by the deceiver to provoke prayers to God to satisfy selfish needs and to desecrate what it could not control or possess with the intent to cause so much trauma that the vessel would be unable to commune in faith with God. (With the exception of the early years of my first marriage, most of my prayers were accepting the circumstances and praying for the strength to endure). It has only been through God initiating communication and manifesting confirmations on the earthly plain that I have dared to start or continue these works. By the end of 2005, it had developed into a faith that nothing in my life was a "coincidence" and that if God had led to me understand something then it had a purpose, including my weaknesses or mistakes (of which there is no shortage).

Further, as I re-read the bible over 2005, it became clear that at some point in history some poor woman would have to take the brunt of God's anger against all women. It might as well be me as someone else. One of my fears is that not enough has been done, because the deceiver will make it even more difficult in the future and in the meantime millions of women are experiencing living deaths as we endure misogynistic repression. Further, the escalation of abuse has become so dysfunctional, and the weapons of mass destruction so powerful that angry souls could wipe away the future and hope for all humanity and not just the feminine. Surely, at some point men have to realize that if they want a future at all, let alone one with hope, that they have to embrace the feminine.

When God asked this vessel to do this heralding work in 2001, the human component had an inkling of the possibilities (see Grounds for Hope paper) and took upon herself to protect and hide the divine component for as long as possible. Even when she was "failing" she would pray to the Father for forgiveness because she was simply overwhelmed and needed some respite. During 2005 it was useful to continue the behaviors to both comfort her because she was simply terrified¹, and it lulled the deceiver's minions into a false sense of security that she was incapable of being any kind of a threat to them or their interests.

There are bullying souls who like to state that the thought of sin is the same as committing the sin. Based on the fact that God hasn't hit me with bolts of lightning for uncharitable thoughts (especially around Christmas time when I realized I'd stepped into one of God's snares), it is fair to say that God allows us to pray/meditate/mull over a problem. He does not respond to our internal chatter until we move from contemplation to decision. However, if one has an "accident" that is consistent with an internal decision to do harm to an enemy (directly or indirectly) that has an element of premeditation (your heart had been set to do harm prior to the incident).

¹ A calming mantra before a major leap of faith helps e.g.: "Feel the fear and do it anyway"